Foreword

‘Our rich and varied cultural heritage has a profound power to help build our nation,’ said Nelson Mandela, the late South-African political leader, while addressing his nation on their Heritage Day on September 23, 1996. The thought, however, holds true for countries across the world, especially India. One of India’s key strengths lies in its myriad and diverse culture that has helped it find a unique position on the world map. There are, for instance, 36 World Heritage Sites recognised by UNESCO in India, the sixth most of countries around the world.

It was the need to celebrate this cultural heritage and make it accessible to everyone that led to the inception of India Heritage Walk Festival. It also laid the ground to identify and form a network of cultural practitioners across India who supported us in realising this mission. This not only allowed the regional engagements that we sought but addressed the special needs of varied target groups such as the differently abled. Aligned with Sahapedia’s policy to offer free access to information on heritage, art and culture, the festival was open to heritage enthusiasts from all walks of life.

With heritage walks being the prime element of the festival, the purpose was to generate interest amongst the attendees to discover the city, its streets, its people and its stories. The best walks go beyond being purely physical or aesthetic experiences of encountering monuments, historic sites or neighbourhoods, feeding our imagination and helping us understand the lives and worldviews of those who came before us.

However, the festival went beyond its indicative name to organise Baithaks that comprised a series of talks by experts in multiple cities to have open discussions on subjects revolving around art, heritage and culture, drawing examples from the current context and trends. In view of the youth that forms over 50 per cent of India’s population, and thus forms a majority of our audience, Instameets and an Online Heritage Film Festival were also integrated.

While we are encouraged by the overwhelming response to the first edition of the festival, my hope is that Sahapedia’s India Heritage Walk Festival 2018, generously supported by YES Global Institute, continues to open up more conversations and overall sensitivity towards heritage.

Foreword

India is one of the oldest and richest civilizations in the world, with an ancient and rich history, and unique geographic and cultural landscape, which make it a popular global tourist destination. Culture and heritage play a vital role in boosting livelihood security and strengthening local economies, thereby contributing to overall socio-economic development of the country.

While focus on heritage in India has largely been limited to preserving historical landmarks, it is vital to have a holistic approach towards protecting and revitalizing other tangible and intangible forms of heritage, such as culinary and fine arts, and indigenous craft, skills and traditions. It is encouraging to note that the understanding of heritage in India is gradually evolving from mere protection of historic monuments to that of preservation and showcasing of various art forms. It is, therefore, imperative to protect, revitalize and promote cultural expressions and practices of all communities across the country.

Towards this objective, YES Arts & Culture partnered with Sahapedia to curate the India Heritage Walk Festival 2018, a first of its kind pan-India festival. With diverse activities ranging from guided heritage walks and tours of historic monuments such as Qutab Minar, cultural corridors of Srinagar, fallen warbirds of Itanagar and iconic Gujarati Havelis of Patan, to interactive discussions and film screenings, the India Heritage Walk Festival brought together art enthusiasts, knowledge experts and thought leaders on an engaging platform.

I am delighted to present this compendium of the YES Arts & Culture - Sahapedia partnership, which has been immensely successful in showcasing the vast untapped potential of India's culture, promoting responsible tourism and providing a unique opportunity for thousands of people to experience our rich history and heritage.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Preface

Walking is a basic human activity, and our reasons for walking are many: there are the retirees who walk the neighborhood park, the commuters who rush from bus and metro stations to their offices, and the pet parents who make brief forays to the backs of their colonies for their dogs to do the necessary. Then there are those who walk to know the city, to be the city. Named flâneurs (men) / flâneuse (women) in French, they observe the city, and walk for the sake of walking. In other words, their interest is the city, its streets, its people and the stories of its colonies, ruins, mainstays and migrants.

It is this last purpose—walking for discovery's sake—that the India Heritage Walk Festival (IHWf) was about. The Festival went on throughout February across 20 Indian cities. Leading the walks for this festival were people who feel their cities, and who feel for their cities. And so, they generously agreed to share their observations, their research and their love for their urban neighbourhoods with others. The focus of these walks ranged from food galis and urban spaces to historic monuments and museums. Participants who signed up for IHWf were a mixed bag—walkers in their own cities but visitors to others, or those just beginning to explore cities on their own, or people looking to take a break from the daily hustle they experience their lives to be.

Apart from walks, IHWf 2018 offered other heritage-related activities such as film screenings on Sahapedia's Youtube channel, talks on themes ranging from performing arts to literature, and Instameets for visual storytellers. Generously sponsored by YES Global Institute and curated by area experts from Sahapedia, the India-wide festival aimed to nurture public interest in India's history-soaked city narrative, and stoke conversations about thoughtful ways of weaving our past and present knowledges with our plans for India's future.

About

India Heritage Walk Festival, 2018, was a month-long festival led by Sahapedia and YES Global Institute in February. With its varied lineup—walks, talks, and films—it explored the diversity that characterizes the cultural fabric of our country, such as food, heritage, nature, art, architecture and so on.

Ranging from museums, and historically significant monuments and markets to explorations of interesting natural landscapes and areas known for their rich cuisine, the programme was curated thematically. The focus had been to encourage and increase different forms of engagement with interesting and important heritage spaces, while also ensuring the accessibility of these spaces to various audience groups. These efforts had been specially directed towards those groups for whom engagement programmes in heritage spaces are commonly unavailable, such as children, the differently abled and those from economically disadvantaged backgrounds. We had also curated specific walks and events with specific user groups in mind, such as students, travellers, local residents, and professional groups such as photographers, conservationists, and so on.

Through the festival, Sahapedia and YES Global Institute aimed to highlight these issues to other institutions in the culture space, and emphasize the need to make heritage spaces more interesting and inclusive.

Fancy stories of power, history and culture? Stories of the Throne- Exploring Tripunithura which will be held on February 16, is offering culture enthusiasts the perfect opportunity to explore Tripunithura, which was considered to be the seat of power of the Cochin Royal Family.

The event organised as part of the India Heritage Walk Festival held across 20 cities across India will take participants through some of the important sites in town, including Status Square, Clock Tower (Mamallika), Pooranathayasa temple, Kalkotta Palace, Iron Bridge, and the elephant stables. The participants will be taken through these sites as they are engaged in stories about the Cochin Royal family and its contribution towards multiculturalism, public infrastructure, the national movement and conservation of traditional art forms. The tour ends at the gates of Sree Pooranathayasa temple.

"We hope in experts, guides and historians for the walk which will allow the public to get in-depth knowledge of the place," said Tanya, who is the senior research co-ordinator with Sahapedia which is hosting the event.

Heritage walk in Jodhpur from today

TIMES NEWS NETWORK

Jodhpur: A two-day heritage walk will be organised in Jodhpur from February 15. The event will be held by Jodhpur chapter of INTACH in association with Mehrangarh Museum Trust and Sahapedia, an online encyclopedia of Indian arts and culture and the cultural division of Yes Global Institute.

As a part of the series of on-going India Heritage Walk Festival (IHWF), these walks are being organized in 20 historic cities across the nation with a view to encourage citizens to explore the tangible and intangible heritage of their cities and towns.

In Jodhpur, this walk, spanning three-hours, will explore the various nooks and corners of the city with experts narrating the tales behind the city's handicraft industry, famous for its quality and craftsmanship, particularly popular among tourists due to their unique design.

Mehrangarh Fort with its beautiful stone carvings will be refreshed in the memory of local residents through this walk.

Vaibhav Chauhan, festival director (IHWF) and secretary, Sahapedia, said that the IHWF is an attempt to create authentic, credible, and exhaustive content on our rich heritage and culture.

"We are developing a network of cultural practitioners across the country.

This festival is a part of this pan-India movement, making heritage spaces more popular, more accessible and more connected."

Walking, they say, is the best way to feel a city and get a sense of its being. It is the best multi-sensory experience that is. Something that heritage experts around the world are trying to use to develop a sense of connectedness to our civilizational past and thread our legacy forward knowing where we come from. Globally, heritage walks are now part of a tourist experience and India, too, is waking up to them.

From textile trails in Ahmedabad to stories of the Partition in Amritsar and from exploring the making of Latent Delhi to tracing the history of the sites in Mumbai, a first-of-its-kind pan-India heritage-themed festival promises to offer diverse experiences to people this month.

The India Heritage Walk Festival began on Sunday with walks in the Ahmedabad, Delhi, Mehrauli Archaeological Park and a nature walk in Hyderabad, its organizers said. The festival spans

Hashmi began undertaking heritage walks around 15 years ago. He recalled, "I started the walk with school children who used to come to a creative activity centre that I looked after. And the vision of the idea happened when I realised that the kids growing up in the city didn't know anything about it. Thus, Discover Delhi walks happened and it has continued to grow since then. As a result of heritage walks, I realised there are numerous people who are interested in heritage but are unsure if they can visit a structure and understand the intricacies of its history on their own. There is a lot of diffidence. So, when they find out that someone is conducting a heritage walk, they are more than willing to take on time." He has reached a certain stature, so he just has to announce a walk and the number of people

India Heritage Walk 2018: Exploring history of Jews in Kochi
